THE MODERATOR: Questions, please.

Q. Obviously it was very, very tight. I'm sure it's difficult to speak right after that match. What did it mean to you to be part of such a big battle, leading Ecuador at the Davis Cup Finals?

EMILIO GOMEZ: Well, it's been tough. It was tough, but at the same time it was pretty incredible to be in that atmosphere. For me it's the first time to be in that kind of match. In 20 years, almost 30 years of my career...

Of course, sad, disappointed, angry, a little bit of everything because I wanted to give Ecuador the chance to go have a chance to win the tie.

Even though most of the people didn't believe it, but this show that we are capable of doing great things not only in Davis Cup but other things, too, other tournaments.

For me, I know I can be -- whatever feelings I have now, I don't really feel like happy at all because how it went at the end. I know my head will calm down a little bit. Also that was the best experience on a tennis court for me.
