THE MODERATOR: Questions in Chinese.

Q. Congratulations on the Grand Slam performance. Can you talk about the magic moments you had together, not to mention this match today, but talk about the past cooperation, how did you make those magic moments happen?

WANG XINYU: We've been working very well together. Good chemistry. No matter what the results were, we've been encouraging each other.

In terms of the style of play, very similar. We complement each other.

HSIEH SU-WEI: We're really happy. Not much pressure. We have been really happy in these Grand Slams, just trying our best.

We're really close in the race to the Finals, so we are working hard for that.

Q. Watching the match, especially the second set, you were leading at the very beginning. When you were playing this match, there wasn't that much pressure. What would you want to focus on? Without that pressure, what kind of ambitions do you have? Are there any things you want to work on together? After the French Open, you practiced separately, then you competed together in Cincinnati, then here. Are there any differences in your focus?

HSIEH SU-WEI: In terms of doubles, I think the most important thing is to be happy. Not much demand and requirements. We want to do our best.

In terms of the Finals, we just want to fight on, we want to improve.

Q. The national team of China published the list for the Paris Olympics. You are one of them. In the Hainan province of China, there is a clay training center for the Paris Olympics, the winter training camp. In terms of the winter training in Hainan, do you have any plans and goals?

WANG XINYU: Representing China at the Paris Olympics, it's a goal for every athlete because after a whole year on the tour. It wouldn't be a problem for Su-Wei. I think no matter where she practices, it is fine. But for me, I want to perform my best in each stop.

Q. The crowd was really supporting you. Did you hear their cheers? Was that pressure or something you can digest very well on court?

WANG XINYU: I would focus on each point, just focusing myself, not to be distracted by those external factors.

HSIEH SU-WEI: Were you not distracted? I was a little bit. Probably because I just came back this year.
