Q. Karrie, thanks for taking the time. What do you make of what Minjee is doing here in a major championship?

KARRIE WEBB: Well, I think she's just hanging tough. I was out there the first three days and it's just really challenging conditions. Course setup isn't easy at all. She's just hanging tough. She's got such a great mentality for a major championship.

Q. You know all about major championships and winning and running away from the field. You started final rounds with big leads. The lead was 4-under her. What's that like when you're up four in terms of a mindset and attacking on that final day?

KARRIE WEBB: I think it's almost more uncomfortable than if you were tied for the lead or even one ahead. I think especially with the conditions that they knew they were going to be faced with today. I think that just makes that mental challenge even more so.

And it's hard because you don't want to play conservatively. You want to try and play the way you have the last three days; but you also don't -- the way that course is setup, it almost doesn't reward taking on too much risk. It also then makes it really challenging to hold the greens if you play too conservatively.

I think she's done really well today. Minjee, you can't really read her. You can't tell if she's playing well or badly, which I think is great. She's not showing any negative body language to her playing partners, which is probably making them feel like she feels in control even if inside she's still very nervous.
